● Ruffled Barbour jackets in the Cotswold village of Barnsley, where the locals are digesting radical plans to dismantle Liz Hurley's local, the gorgeously appointed if rather unimaginatively named The Village Pub and move it to a purpose-built housing development in nearby Cirencester. The entrepreneur Jeremy Paxton wants to take the pub apart brick by brick and transport it to his housing development, the Lower Mill estate. "It's not as hard as you think to move a pub like this and it's better recycled than closed," Paxton tells us.
